Remembrance On Memorial Day

Although Memorial Day may include barbecues and three day weekends, keep in mind that its purpose is a time to remember those in the armed forces who have sacrificed their lives for our freedom and way of life.

Social Network Sites Make Money From Your Personal Information

New York Senator, Charles Schumer, had a press conference blasting social network sites for selling users' private information to marketing companies. Facebook says that you can "opt out" of this feature by changing your privacy settings.

Senator Schumer says that the federal government has to make new internet rules.

This is just a way for these social networks to make money but why should they do it at our expense?

Be Careful What You Click While Online

Facebook, Myspace, and some other social networking sites have been getting into hot water over their new and questionable methods of dealing with your personal information. It turns out that they have been sending your personal information to advertising agencies with or without your permission.

When you click on an advertisement under

'normal' internet conditions, the only personal information the advertisers can see is when and where on the internet the advertisement was clicked on. On social websites however, you are logged in and much of your personal information is there to see once you have clicked on an advertisement. The advertisers may see who you are, where you live, your occupation and anything else you may have failed to make private in your privacy settings.

Privacy settings on social networks are very important to keep in check. Facebook alone has been changing their privacy policy way too much lately. Although they let you know about their changes by email or a small blurb on your personal Facebook page, if you do not make the corresponding changes in your privacy settings you may become a victim.
